Yumi Na recently graduated with an MFA from the USC Roski School of Art and Design. She is currently at the forefront of exploring the exciting intersection of AI and digital media, focusing on how these technologies can be creatively merged to open up new possibilities in art and design. Na's work is all about pushing the envelope and discovering innovative ways to blend these dynamic fields. In addition to her artistic practice, Na is currently teaching courses on integrating AI into digital creation, sharing her insights on how these tools can revolutionize the creative process. Through her Surrealism Digital Collages, Na emphasizes a true collaboration with AI, viewing it not merely as a tool but as an active partner that brings a new dimension to her work. Her approach challenges conventional perceptions of both art and technology, suggesting a symbiotic relationship where each enhances the other, resulting in richer, more intricate expressions of ideas.

Artistic Philosophy

Yumi Na's artistic philosophy is deeply rooted in the convergence of traditional art forms and cutting-edge technology, aiming to push the boundaries of visual narrative. In her Surrealism Digital Collages, Yumi emphasizes a true collaboration with AI, viewing it not merely as a tool but as an active partner that brings a new dimension to her creative process. This collaborative approach, leveraging the distinctive characteristics of AI, challenges conventional perceptions of both art and technology, proposing a symbiotic relationship where each element enhances the other. The result is a richer, more intricate expression of ideas. Through her work, Yumi invites viewers to explore the subtleties of this collaboration, engaging them in a visual dialogue about the evolving role of AI in shaping our understanding of art and reality.
